ABSTRACT

The purpose of this paper is to review and reveal trends of research that ABSEL has undergone and identify the impact that the most active ABSEL scholars have had on the research agenda of the organization. The authors use content analysis to reveal patterns of emphasis of research throughout the 29 years of ABSEL's existence. In addition, the authors quantitatively record and report the contribution of ABSEL's leading scholars.

INTRODUCTION

Over the years there has been a sustained interest in the nature of research conducted by members of ABSEL. As early as 1985, Butler et al. critically reviewed the research design utilized by ABSEL authors. In 1989, Markulis et al. provided a 15-year profile of the salient trends of the proceedings. Aspects of ABSEL's award-winning papers were reviewed by Markulis et al. (1991). In a paper that received ABSEL's best-paper recognition, Burns and Banasiewicz provided a bibliometric study of author cocitations (Burns, 1994). In celebration of its 25th anniversary a number of researchers reviewed the contributions over the decades of the 70's, 80's and 90's (Graf, 1999; Kelly, 1999; Butler, 1999). Also in 1999, Gold and Pray critically reviewed the simulations (Gold, 1999). The focus of the Gold and Pray study was targeted specifically at the algorithms and model enhancements that have been reported by ABSEL

More recently a paper entitled, ABSEL: The Way We Talk (Howard, 2001) was presented at the annual ABSEL conference and appeared in the proceedings. Although the paper was generally well received at the conference, at least one member of the audience offered some criticisms of the methodology (admittedly minor) and suggestions for "improving the paper." This paper reports the results of a rethinking and recasting of the previous analysis. The suggestions for improvement have been incorporated into the methodology of this paper.

In addition to responding to the reaction to the initial paper, this paper extends the analysis into the focus of ABSEL research over its 29-year history. The analysis that follows can be thought to address three fundamental questions that once answered are very telling in terms of the nature of the research conducted by ABSEL. The three basic questions stated in the simplest form are: 1. What do we say? 2. Who says it?, and 3. Who do we cite? The answers to these questions provide insights into the nature of ABSEL.

This paper makes extensive use of a technique called content analysis that was extolled by Holsti, (1969) and more recently commended and extended by Krippendorff (1980). As Krippendorff explains it "content analysis is nothing other than what everyone is doing when reading a newspaper except on a larger scale." If one considers his comment one can gain an appreciation for the new research that is featured in this paper in contrast to the research methodology of the predecessor paper. In this case the Krippendorff reference to a newspaper is totally applicable. In the earlier paper the authors performed a content analysis on the TITLE of the articles. This was perfectly analogous to reviewing the headlines of newspaper articles. Based on the comments of audience critics this current paper reports the results of a content analysis performed on the entire text of the ABSEL articles, obviously analogous to examining the entire body of Krippendorff's hypothetical newspaper articles.

Content analysis is a research technique that has been employed for over one hundred years. applications it was referred to as quantitative newspaper analysis (Krippendorff, 1980). Krippendorff reports that as early as 1893 rudimentary forms where "simply measuring the column inches of a newspaper devoted to particular subject matters" were used to reveal "the truth about newspapers" (1980, p. 14). More recently content analysis has found itself in other interesting applications. In the 1930's it was employed as a method to assess the activity of propagandists in the great flurry of mass communications that preceded World War II. In this application, it was thought to be a useful tool for identifying individuals as "unethical" sources of influence. (Although the authors of this article may appreciate the value of the application of propaganda analysis for ABSEL authors, it is strictly stated that this is not an intended result of this research.)

Although content analysis clearly has its critics, it is fascinating to know that British analysts were able to use it to predict the date of the deployment of Germany's V-weapons by analysis of the speeches of high ranking German officials (1980, p. 17). The advent of computers facilitated the otherwise onerous task of content analysis. Over the years software has been developed that trivializes the task of screening documents and summing word counts.

The query utility that has been built into the Bernie Keys Library is ready made to perform several of the variants of basic content analysis. The precise variant used in this paper is classified as semantical content analysis. In this case the authors used the sub-category of designations analysis as a methodological tool for the analysis. According to Krippendorff the uses of this type of content analysis include; to describe trends in communication, to trace the development of scholarship, and to reveal the focus of attention (1980).

Perhaps equal in importance to what is said? is the question who says it? This article reports the results of a longitudinal review of the contributions made by ABSEL's most prolific scholars. To consider this dimension the library of all ABSEL proceedings was perused. Although no attempts were made to establish qualitative distinctions, the quantitative analysis that is reported certainly provides an indication of ABSEL's recognized and acknowledged scholars.

The third dimension that is explored in this paper addresses the question, who do we cite? Academicians all know how flattering it is to be cited by another scholar. Obviously a citation is a sign that the research of the author is at least worthy of comment, even though on occasion the comment might be critical. With this in mind the authors of the paper reviewed the proceedings and made a quantitative assessment of the numbers of citations of the most prominent ABSEL authors. Again, no attempt is made to ascribe qualitative distinction to the citations. The underlying premise that the reader may infer is that the quantity of citations by colleagues is at least a casual proxy for the significance of a member's scholarship.

METHODOLOGY

The Bernie Keys Library, a single CD with the full contents of the ABSEL proceedings for the past 29 years, was used as the basis for the content analysis and the citation study. The original paper searched the titles of the proceedings for almost 50 word or word combinations that were frequently used in ABSEL research articles. The words from the previous study were used again in this follow-up study. The difference this time was that the database was searched for all occurrences of the word – not just in the titles. The search function in Adobe was utilized to conduct this process and each time the word appeared any place in a document it was counted as a "hit" for that word. There was no differentiation made between a document containing the word once and a document containing the word multiple times — so a word that appeared once in an article was credited with 1 hit and a word that appeared several times in the same article was also credited with 1 hit. Table 1 shows the ranking, based on the number of hits for each word, from highest to lowest, for both studies. The analysis of the rankings provides the reader with some interesting insights into ABSEL research and perhaps more telling, some possible pitfalls of the semantical content analysis method. The "results" section of this paper discusses these findings in detail. Appendix A lists the words from the previous results using only the titles (updated to include the latest volumes of the proceedings) and the new results from the extension of the search procedure to the entire document.

The authors also updated, to reflect the additional years of the proceedings, the author table originally presented. The authors would like to point out that the difficulties reported in the first paper with the various spellings, etc. of authors' names, were not encountered in this subsequent search – probably indicating a better indexing process by the compilers of the database. Application of this "cleaner" database resulted in some minor adjustments to the original authors table, but no significant changes to the list of top authors. The Bernie Keys Library was used to count the number of documents in which an author's name appeared. For this search, the authors name could appear anywhere in the document - as author or as a citation. A simple arithmetic difference between the total number of occurrences and the number of authored articles provides a convenient mechanism to determine the number of citations of an author's work. Table 2 presents a list of the number of articles written by each author and Table 3 presents the citation information for the same authors in rank order.

RESULTS

A comparison of words presented in Table 1 with the same words from the earlier study (Howard, 2001, p. 114) shows that there were basically no major changes in the ranking of the words based upon frequency of appearance. There was some slight movement in the middle grouping with Training and Design each falling 2 spots and ABSEL and Strategy both moving up in rank.

Table 1 reveals that the top 4 words, Simulation, Business, Experiential, and Learning were the same under both methods even though there was a minor change in order resulting in the new order of--Experiential, Business, Simulation, and Learning. The fact that the word Experiential appears to have overtaken the word Simulation certainly has implications for an organization whose origins are firmly rooted in the promulgation of the benefits of both simulations and experiential exercises. A note of explanation specific to the top 4 words is necessary. The name of the proceedings is included in the header of each document in the Bernie Keys library — and Business, Simulation, and Experiential have always been in the title of the proceedings. This inflated the number of times that these words appeared, but a check of the titles and the articles indicated that these four words were indeed used in both the titles and the text of the documents sufficiently to warrant their high ranks.

The most significant changes were in the number of times that Participant(s) and Review appeared when the entire document was searched compared to titles only. They went from 29th to 6th and 35th to 12th, respectively, in their rankings. Effectiveness and Regression both moved up 9 positions. Survey, Design and Demand all increased their rankings by 5 spots or more.

Interestingly, the words Game and Gaming both fell in rank from 5th to10th and 11th to 20th, respectively. The word Exercise fell from 6th to 14th place. International and Internet both lost ground as well. Assessment went from 15th to 22nd position, while Evaluation dropped from 10th to 15th place. Even the ranking of the word ABSEL fell by 6 positions taking it out of the top 20 to the 24th spot.

At first glance these findings might seem to indicate a major shift in the thinking about "what we say" as words like Game and Gaming, Exercise, Assessment and Evaluation seemed to lose ground. But a closer inspection might actually question that conclusion. As a result of the whole document search, words like Participant(s), Review, Regression, Survey, and even Design and Demand all took a more prominent position than in the previous study. However, these words are commonly used and integral components of the ABSEL language. One would expect them to occur frequently in the context of research, but not necessarily be the focus of the paper being presented, and therefore, not to receive the prominence associated with keywords found in the title of an article. To demonstrate this point, imagine the multiple meanings of the words Demand (to demand something versus a demand curve or function) and Review (a compilation of research versus "let's review our findings") and it is easy to see that the usage of the word in the body of the paper does not mean it is the focal point. Ironically, one could also conclude that the higher prevalence of words such as Exercise, Assessment and Evaluation, International and Internet in the title only search may be a deliberate attempt by the authors to include a "buzz" word in the title of the paper.

The updated ABSEL Authors list in Table 2 shows that the leading authors have not changed much since the previous study. Jim Gentry has overtaken Tony Faria as the top author (must be Jim's honeymoon is over and he is back to the grindstone) and Precha Thavikulwat has edged into the top 5 list. Gosen (pud), Wolfe, Burns, Cannon, Wheatley, Strang, and Anderson round out the new top 10 list. The re-emergence of Dan Berenenstuhl to the list of "active" authors is also noted and welcomed.

Table 3 presents the results of the citation analysis component. It should be no surprise to the ABSEL readership that Joe Wolfe and Bernie Keys are the organization's two most cited ABSEL authors. Not far behind are Jim Gentry, Al Burns and Dick Teach. As long-time ABSEL contributors it is only natural that their works will be so often cited by others. Appendix B shows an alphabetical listing of the authors' citation information.

CONCLUSIONS

As was the case with the first content analysis study, this updated research found that ABSEL researchers used words that have a strong relationship to the organization's name. Business, Simulation, Experiential and Learning were again the four most common words and that would be expected. The new methodology did not alter the overall conclusion that we talk about topics such as Participant(s), Groups, Performance, Evaluation, Assessment, Exercise, and even Survey, Design, Demand, and Review.

However, the impetus for rethinking and repeating this study was the suggestion that perhaps the original methodology could be improved and that the results would be a better indicator. With that in mind the authors again used a form of content analysis but searched the entire body of the document and not just the titles. While the process was even easier than the original, it is not clear that the results are any more representative than those of the first study. It became very clear to the authors that the frequency of the word usage did not always indicate that the focus of the paper was on that topic. The meteoric rise in rank from 35th to 12th of the word Review was the perfect example of what might be wrong with the new methodology. The word clearly could be used in several contexts even in instances in which it was not the focal point of the discussion. While content analysis has long been accepted as a valid research method, a weakness may be the arbitrary "scoring" method - in this case - word count (Babbie, 1973). While using titles only may have its limitations, it appears that for the most part it may be a better indicator of the main topic the paper is presenting.

A not so earth-shattering result was finding that some of the more senior ABSELites are also the most frequently cited. The most prolific authors are also some of the most cited authors and they have been active in ABSEL for two decades or more. Their expertise in the area of simulations and experiential learning is well documented.
