

About the Authors

M. Beatriz Arias

M. Beatriz Arias (Ph.D. Stanford University) is an Associate Professor of Curriculum and Instruction at Arizona State University. Dr. Arias has been a court appointed expert in school desegregation cases including Los Angeles, Denver and in San Jose California was the Court Monitor for seventeen years. Her publications focus on the implications of desegregation policy for Latinos and on teacher preparation for English Language Learners. E-mail: bea@asu.edu

Christian Faltis

Christian Faltis (Ph.D., Stanford University) is Professor of Language & Literacy and Curriculum Studies at Arizona State University, where he has taught since 1991. He is currently Director of Graduate Studies and Research. He has published 15 books and more than 60 articles and chapters on bilingual education, teaching English learners, and language acquisition. His recent book (with C. Coulter) is Teaching English Learners and Immigrant Students in Secondary Schools (2007, Merrill). Prof. Faltis also paints, and has shown his art in Texas and Arizona. E-mail: cfaltis@asu.edu

María E. Fránquiz

María E. Fránquiz is associate professor of Bicultural and Bilingual Studies at the University of Texas at San Antonio. She is published in Language Arts, The High School Journal, Multicultural Perspectives, Reading Research Quarterly, Bilingual Research Journal, Journal of Classroom Interaction, among others. She has co-edited a book with C. S. Salinas (2004), Scholars in the Field: The Challenges of Migrant Education. Her research interests are bilingual education, multicultural children's literature, culturally responsive instruction, and the development of multiple literacies and identities. E-mail: Maria.franquiz@utsa.edu

Sally Galman

Sally Galman is an Assistant Professor of Teacher Education, School Improvement and Program Evaluation at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst School of Education. Her research interests include exploring gender and pre-service teacher identity development, sustained effects of racial and social justice curricula, ethnographic methods, and arts-based research. E-mail: sally@educ.umass.edu

Immaculee Harushimana

Immaculee Harushimana is an Assistant Professor of Language, Literacy, and Technology in the Classroom at Lehman College of City University of New York. Her main area of research interest is literacy instruction and motivational pedagogy for struggling urban adolescents. Currently, her research mainly focuses on the literacy needs and academic visibility of non-predominant minorities, especially African-born adolescents in urban public schools. E-mail: immaculee.harushimana@lehman.cuny.edu

Marie Judson

Marie Judson teaches in Communication at the University of California, San Diego. Her current courses include “Social Aspects of Computing” and a practicum course for which university students help children with computers and homework at an afterschool program called La Clase Magica, applying theories of development and diversity to their experiences. She began in Language Studies, then, with a Master’s in Educational Technologies, worked for a number of years in training, research and consultation in diverse classrooms across the country and in Puerto Rico, bringing computer skills into teaching and learning. Now, in the final stages of her Ph.D. in Communication, Marie Judson centers her research on equity in schooling. Her dissertation, which is being prepared for book publication, is Social Dimensions of Technology, Vocation, and Learning in 21st Century High Schools: Case Studies of Career Academies as Fields of Investigation. E-mail: mjudson@ucsd.edu

Elizabeth Mahon

Elizabeth Mahon is an ESL teacher in an urban school in a medium-sized North Carolina city. Her research and writing interests include valid assessments of academic achievement for English Language Learners, the writing development of ELL students, and effective models of ESL inclusion. E-mail: mahon@nc.rr.com

Jeannie Meza

Jeannie Meza is an assistant principal for Socorro High School in the Socorro Independent School District in El Paso. She has worked in the field of education for 10 years as an English and reading teacher, student activities director, and assistant principal for students at the secondary level. Dr. Meza’s experiences working with low socio-economic and at-risk students have influenced her research interest of increasing the use of technology by students to seek out higher education.

Reynaldo Reyes III

Reynaldo Reyes III is an assistant professor in the College of Education, Teacher Education, at the University of Texas at El Paso. He teaches courses in multicultural, bilingual, and ESL education. His research interests include identity, agency, and learning in marginalized, Mexican-descent students; sociocultural influences on learning; student voice and experience in teacher improvement and school reform; critical, social, and cultural issues in teaching and learning English as a second language; and migrant student education. E-mail: rreyes9@utep.edu

David Rutledge

David Rutledge is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction at New Mexico State University, Las Cruces. He teaches undergraduate and graduate courses in learning technologies, bilingual education, and ESL. Dr. Rutledge’s experiences from living in Ecuador, Japan, and Canada have influenced his teaching and research interest of integrating technology with language learning and international education/border studies. E-mail: rutledge@nmsu.edu

Maria del Carmen Salazar

Dr. Maria del Carmen Salazar is a faculty member in the College of Education at the University of Denver. In 2004, Maria completed her doctorate in Social, Multicultural, and Bilingual Foundations of Education from the University of Colorado at Boulder. Maria's research interests include the academic achievement of Mexican immigrant children, including the role that language, identity, and culture play in the academic and social resilience of children of Mexican descent. E-mail: msalazar@du.edu

Cinthia Salinas

Cinthia Salinas is an Assistant Professor in Curriculum and Instruction at the University of Texas at Austin. She teaches elementary and secondary education social studies methods courses along with graduate courses in Secondary Curriculum and Multicultural Education. Her research focus includes late arrival immigrant students, secondary migrant students, and instructional approaches in the social studies for second language learners. E-mail: cssalinas@mail.utexas.edu

Michele Stafford Levy

Michele Stafford Levy is the Induction Coordinator for the University of Texas El Paso's Teachers for a New Era (TNE) funded by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. She is a former high school English teacher, literacy coach, and department chair at Burges High School in El Paso Public Schools. Dr. Levy is now involved in supporting novice teachers during their probationary period and works directly with the public schools on how they can best support new teachers by creating induction programs on their campuses in order to retain the best and the brightest teachers. E-mail: mslevy@utep.edu

Caroline Sullivan

Caroline C. Sullivan is an Assistant Professor at Georgia State University. She teaches middle and secondary social studies methods courses as well as teacher education coursework. Her research focus includes late arrival secondary immigrant students, socioconstructivist approaches for preservice teachers, and issues of positionality in teacher education. E-mail: ccsullivan@mail.utexas.edu

Deborah Svedman

Deborah Svedman has taught in El Paso, Texas for 27 years, mostly bilingual or ESL classes. She earned an M.Ed. in Bilingual Education in 1997, and teaches education courses at UTEP. She earned National Board Certification in 2002 and is currently Coordinator for the National Board Resource Center at UTEP. She still teaches high school algebra to non-English speakers full time.

In 1994, Ms. Svedman received the State, and National, Presidential Award for Excellence in Science and Mathematics Teaching, awarded by the National Science Foundation. In 1995, she received the National Middle School Association Team Teaching Award presented for curriculum design in an ESL program. In 1996, she was named an Exemplary Teacher by the U.S. Department of Education, and in 2002 was the first teacher in El Paso ISD to earn National Board Certification through the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards. E-mail: dsvedman@elp.rr.com

Tom Wacker

Tom Wacker is a secondary social studies teacher and graduate student in Social Studies Education at the University of Texas in Austin. His teaching focus includes middle and secondary social studies with an emphasis in the enacted curriculum. His research focus includes late arrival immigrant students and students in alternative school settings. E-mail: tom.wacker@gmail.com

Mary Ann (Mimi) Wallace

Mary Ann (Mimi) Wallace is currently a TNE, Professor of Practice in the College of Education at The University of Texas at El Paso. She has 19 years experience as a classroom science teacher, the majority of those years spent teaching and learning with high school students in El Paso, Texas. Mimi is also a doctoral student at New Mexico State University with research interests in Border education, social justice and the lives of teachers. E-mail: mwallace@utep.edu