The endangered Western Tragopan (Tragopan melanocephalus).

The Western Tragopan, Tragopan melanocephalus, has the westernmost distribution. In the past, Western Tragopans ranged from Swat in Pakistan to Garhwal in India but were generally considered rare and localized in distribution. Due to a decline within the last century, the species has been given endangered status. Reasons for this decline include destruction of habitat by humans and livestock, egg collecting, hunting for food, and trapping by local villagers. The total world population in 1982 has been estimated at 5,000 birds.

The most current data we have on the species' status in the wild was gathered by Kamal Islam, a graduate student at Oregon State University. Islam conducted field research from May 1 to September 7 and April 1 to October 7, 1983 in the Neelum Valley of Azad Kashmir, northeastern Pakistan. Of the seven areas that were censused, tragopans were found only at Salkhala, Kuttan, and Machiara between 2400m and 3000m in altitude. In all areas the species was discovered in small units with the bulk of the population in the Neelum Valley of Azad, Kasmir, northeastern Pakistan. Of the seven areas that were censused, tragopans were found only at Salkhala, Kuttan, and Machiara between 2400m and 3000m in altitude.
Known and reported distribution of the Western Tragopan in Pakistan.

India. Further observation of the tragopan population in the Neelum Valley documented that the species prefers short shrubs and trees and avoided the taller vegetation.

Kamal states that the major threats to the Western Tragopan include "hunting, trapping, grazing of livestock, wood gathering, and clearing of forests for human habitation." Birds are hunted not only for their food value but also for the skins of the colorful males.

While two national parks are proposed that would protect this magnificent pheasant, they are currently only in the planning stage. An effort, by the Government of Pakistan, to establish the species in captivity may be the pheasants' only real hope for long term survival. While the tragopan was maintained in several European collections from 1864 to around 1900, no specimens currently exist in captivity.

The Watchbird offers free publicity for member club bird shows by announcing the dates and locations of the shows. To have your show listed it is necessary to get the data to The Watchbird four to five months before the show date. For example, if your show takes place the first week of October, it should be listed in the August/September issue. The deadline for that issue is June 1st. (Copy/article deadline is two months preceding publication date.)
